With vast ice coverage and biodiversity, and a low rural population, Alaska faces rising temperatures, melting of polar ice caps, and wildlife loss.

To understand how research at public institutions can help policy-makers respond to those issues, NCSE examined what climate-related work came out of the University of Alaska, chosen because of its research classification, enrollment size, and/or land grant status over the last 5 years (2014-2018).